The School of Law and Justice is working with Professor Jeff Giddings on a National Teaching Fellowship project on law student placement supervision. Professor Giddings will be leading a discussion on best practice models of supervision to help supervisors working with junior lawyers, and practical legal training and work experience students.

MCLE points can be claimed for attending this seminar.

The School of Law and Justice encourages students to gain practical skills and insights into the roles of legal practitioners and paralegals through participation in the School's law placement and paralegal placement programs. These programs enable students to work within a legal environment under the supervision of an experienced legal practitioner, and support students' transition to admission to practice or to a paralegal career.

If you and your firm / organisation are interested in participating in the School's placement programs – or if you would like more information – please contact the placement coordinator, Dr Jennifer Nielsen at:
